Republicans Kick Off By Attacking Mondale

By Jack Nelson Los Angeles Times Service

DALLAS - Hoping to convert President Ronald Reagan's strength into new opportunities for their candidates everywhere, Republicans opened their 1984 convention here with attacks on the Democratie presidential nominee. Walter F. Mondale, and special ap-peals to women and disaffected Democrats.

The 2,235 delegates, assembled Monday in the Dallas Convention Center, cheered as the Senate ma-jority leader, Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, and other speakers assailed Mr. Mondale as a captive of special interests and portrayed him as a loser who represents a failed past.

Mr. Baker, referring to Mr. Mondale's service as vice president in the Carter administration, said:

"The Carter-Mondale team gave us double-digit inflation, 21-per-cent interest rates, a punching bag for an economy and the misery index. Misery has become very important to Walter Mondale. When e's in office, he creates it. When he's out, he invents it because Walter Mondale has nothing to offer a successful America.

Mr. Baker drew a sharp contrast between what he called "a team that has proven it can succeed and a team that has proven it can't."

And in the convention's keynote address, the U.S. treasurer, Katherine D. Ortega, quoted Mr. Reagan to answer Democratie charges that the administration has favored the affluent over poor and middle-in-

The Republicans used the opening session as a showcase for women officials, with Ms. Ortega; Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the chief U.S. delegate 10 the United Nations: Marga-ret M. Heckler, secretary of Health and Human Services, delivering major talks on foreign affairs and domestie issues.

Republican officials candidly say they are emphasizing women officials at the convention in response to Mr. Mondale's selection Representative Geraldine A. Ferraro as his running mate. And they are actively courting Democrats that they feel may be ready to are going to vote for him again in abandon a party divided by competing interests.

"The Democratic Party, as evidenced in San Francisco, has left the basic values that party had had," said Senator Paul Laxalt of Nevada, chairman of the Reagan campaign. "It's become a conglomerate of interests, and that's going to be our basie pitch."

The Republican Party chairman, Frank J. Farhenkopf Jr., who spoke after calling the convention to order Monday morning, asserted that Mr. Mondale's labor support consists of "labor bosses strung out on political handouss: they aren't hard-working union men and wom-

Freedom Someday for Eastern Bloc

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, asserting that "the tide of history is with us," has expressed confidence that freedom would someday be restored to the Soviet-dominated countries of Eastern Europe.

In a speech Monday to the annual convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Chicago, Mr. Shultz echoed a theme struck Friday by President Ronald Reagan, who said that the United States would not passively accept the "permanent subjugation of the people of Eastern Europe." On Saturday, the Soviet press agency Tass accused Mr. Reagan of challenging "the postwar political setup in Europe."

Mr. Shultz's remarks, which coincided with the opening of the Republican National Convention in Dallas, seemed to represent part of a Reagan administration effort to portray U.S. foreign policy as dynamic and the Soviet Union's as

In the speech, Mr. Shultz ex-tolled the value of a strong military as a prerequisite for an effective diplomacy.

As your secretary of state, I can tell you from experience that no diplomacy can succeed in an environment of fear or from a position of weakness," he said.

We know, as surely as we know anything, that negotiations and di-plomacy oot backed by strength are ineffectual at best, dangerous at

At the same time, he said, it was important to have patience in the conduct of foreign policy and oot to expect overnight changes.
"Our policies are working," Mr.
Shultz said. "Gradually, but inevitably, communist aggression is los-ing the contest" in Central America and in other parts of the world.

"The tide of history is with us," he declared, "The values that Americans cherish — democratic freedom, peace and the hope of prosperity - are taking root all around the world

He said that in Europe the "solidarity of democratic nations endures" and that the bonds among the allies "are strong and secure."

Although Mr. Zaccaro, a New "Our shared moral values and York real-estate developer, repolitical principles have made NATO the keeper of the peace for 35 years," he said, "and will contindid not release other returns he has filed with the Internal Revenue day that he had made a mistake in Service, such as partnership returns the 1978 return, he did not fully and returns for his real-estate busiue to do so into the next century and beyond."

In contrast, he said, the Soviet alliance was in trouble.

"If there is weakness in Europe, rate picture of his total income. it is within the Soviet empire," Mr. Shultz said. "We will never accept the idea of a divided Europe," Mr. Shultz said.
"Time is not on the side of imperial domination. We may not see freedom in Eastern Europe in our lifetime. Our children may not see it in theirs. But someday it will happen. The world's future is a future of

His comment about not accepting "a divided Europe" was consistent with Mr. Reagan's remarks Friday before a Polish-American group. But both speeches raised questions about U.S. policy toward the postwar separation of Europe between East and West.

State Department officials said Monday that the United States remains committed to the Helsinki accords of 1975 that ruled out any change by force in the postwar borders in Europe, and that the administration has no plan to embark on a "liberation" scheme in Eastern

Salvadoran Army Chief Urges Cut in U.S. Advisers

By Robert Block

SAN SALVADOR - The chief of staff of the Salvadoran Rebels Step Up Activity Army has called for a reduction in the oumber of U.S. military advisers in El Salvador.

"I do not want an increase of advisers, I want the number diminished," Colonel Aldolfo Blandon said Monday. "Do you realize this would be a first? To send advisers away, to do the opposite of what was done in Vietnam?"

Colonel Blandon said his field commanders complained they received little support from the American personnel.
"Many do not do anything," he said. "They sit around the barracks and often the commanding officers do not know why they are there."

He reportedly has given a list of the U.S. advisers he considers superfluous to General Paul F. Gorman, commander of the U.S. Southern Command. There are 55 American advisers in the country but there were no details about which ones, or how many, Colonel Blandon consid-

On Aug. 1, General Gorman recommended to Congress that the number of advisers be increased to 125, a suggestion that was rejected by the White House.

"I have always said the advisers were useful but not indispensable," he said. The U.S. advisers were originally sent to El Salvador to help instruct its 40,000-man army in basic military skills and counterinsurgency tactics.

Leaves Some Questions Unresolved

Robert J. McCartney of the Washington Post reported from Leftist Salvadoran guerrillas have reportedly stepped up patrols in the past two weeks and both Salvadoran and U.S. officials said the activity appeared to signal a new offensive that could begin within a month.

The rebels launched a major offensive early last Septemher, taking advantage of the start of the dry season when movement is easier in the hills. But several officials said the guerrillas appeared weaker now than a year ago and one urce with access to military reports said that the Reagan administration apparently had exaggerated predictions of an impending guerrila offensive to help pry military aid from Congress for the Salvadoran government.

"Their ability to stage coordinated attacks, or activity in several places at the same time, is more limited this year." said Lieutenant Colonel Domingo Monterrosa, the army commander in El Salvador's three eastern provinces, on

Colonel Monterrosa attributed the change in part to an increased Salvadoran Army presence around guerrilla strongholds in the northeastern part of the country. #### Liberia Says Professor Planned Coup

MONROVIA (Reuters) - Monrovia radio accused a detained university professor Tuesday of plotting with foreign backing to overthrow the government of Samuel K. Doe.

The radio, citing an official statement issued Monday, said Amos Sawyer, a political science professor at the University of Liberia, had planned to force Mr. Doe to resign by using a series of bomb attacks and to install a Socialist government "with the aid of foreign countries, including three African states." It did not name the nations.

Mr. Sawyer, two colonels and a student leader were arrested on Sunday. Mr. Sawyer, who chaired a committee that wrote the nation's new civilian constitution, formed the Liberia People's Party to contest elections scheduled next year. The radio quoted Mr. Doe, who seized power in a coup in 1980, as reaffirming his commitment to constitutional

DALLAS - The protesters' camp sits on a dusty plain, baking in the beat, wedged between a rail-road track, a jail, a freeway and a polluted river. It held barely 600 people - a small turnout given the occasion and supposed motivation — and the inhabitants have scant hope that their effort represents political change.

Many are frankly discouraged by the slight mustering of their ranks. "Yeah, I was disappointed," said a bearded man in a baseball cap who was squatting on the ground near a campfire Monday. "I assumed the whole plain would be filled with people. I remember when we demonstrated in '68, wore hlack armbands and had 8,000 people. Now there's not enough people to make an impression."

Across the plain, on the other side of the freeway, stood a larger collection of tents. The "roadways" between them were designated with hand-lettered signs presumably intended to inspire the protesters and lift their spirits by recalling leaders of the past: Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard ran near the intersection of John L. ### Thatcher and the Miners

The Platform in Dallas

The British miners' strike has now been running nearly five months, with much violence, hundreds of injuries, hundreds of arrests and a couple of deaths. Since the mines are nationalized, it is a strike against the government. Politics in industrial democracies is generally a process of working out tolerable compromises. That impulse is not visible this summer in Britain.

The immediate issue is the National Coal Board's attempt to close 20 of the least productive and most expensive mines. The union is striking for the preservation of jobs regardless of cost. Beyond that, it is trying to bring down Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government, as it brought down Edward Heath's government a decade ago.

For her part, Mrs. Thatcher has found in the miners and their defense of the uneconomical mines an example of precisely the traditions which, she believes, are going to have to be broken if Britain's economy is ever to grow like France's or West Germany's. The spirit on both sides is radical - the miners' radical Socialism against Mrs. Thatcher's radical rationalism. Each side seems to be convinced that it cannot give up much in this difficult contest of wills without damaging itself fatally.

Both may be right. The miners are weaker than they were a decade ago. They are not getting the same automatic support from other unions that they thing Greek in Turkey continues on a large scale. A group of husiness men called on the Vali to protest against the measure, but he adamsntly refused to allow a strike vote. Their tactic was to begin the strike with the most vehemently committed men and assume that they would sweep all the others along. That has led the union into heavy reliance upon flying squads of pickets moving - illegally back and forth across the country. The result is a great deal of fighting with police, headbanging and rock-throwing.

It is oot a conventional strike but a kind of rebellion, driven by a sense of real despair among the miners. Their union has lost more than half its members in the past 20 years. Normally people drift out of shrinking industries into the others. But the ocemployment rate in Britain is oow nearly 13 percent, by far the highest since the 1930s, and still rising.

Mrs. Thatcher appears to have concluded that it is crucial to her government and to her ideas not only to win this struggle with the miners but to be seen to win it without qualification. Over the months of the strike she has become more inflexible. She is right in principle, but she has long since passed the point at which most skillful politicians would have begun to look for ways to cut the costs of victory.

The continuing violence by the miners is disquieting, but not so disquieting as the all-ornothing mood that seems increasingly to have seized the British government.

DALLAS—The long, distressing runup to the conventions has reconfirmed the judgment of the political scientist James MacGregor Burns. "We possess," he wrote, "one of the worst topleadership recruitment systems in the democratic societies of the world."

In his challenging new book, "The Power to Lead," Burns analyzes America's political flaws and concludes that "the failures have not been only those of particular leadership, but of leadership in a broader sense, and of the system that supports and fragmentizes it." The fact that the unique American constitutional system has lasted nearly 200 years is not a virtue in his eyes.

Certainly he has a strong point in showing how the qualities that now win commation and election have been separated from the capacity to govern well. At times it seems that a good candidate and image, as distinct from substance. Others see the villain in the spread of primaries and the tendency to separate the party from the candidate's personal campaign machinery. The decline of the political DALLAS—The evident strength—and the only potential vulnerability—of Ronald Reagan in this presidential year is summed up in the words of Bob Hughes, the vectors Republican chairman of Cuyahoga County, Ohio. "The issue in Cleveland will be-Reagan," Hughes said, "He so domi-nates the political scene, he's the colossus. Reagan is the candidate. Reagan is the platform, and Reagan is the only issue for the average voter."

That Reagan has attained this status is the measure of his success in the past four years, and the definition of the small risk he and his party face in the II weeks until Election Day. The press has been focusing on the financial disclosure problems of Democratic vice presidential candi-date Geraldine A. Ferraro and the criticisms other Democrats have made of the management of Walter F. Mondale's presidential campaign. But in the view of Republican polister Robert Teeter, these are almost irrelevancies. Mondale is the "gener-

c" Democratic candidate, he says, no better or worse than the rest of the breed, in the voters' eyes. Reagan is focus of attention and decision in a way that no president has been since Franklin D. Roosevelt and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

No one who has been in Dallas the past week can have any doubt that Reagan has rendered the rest of the Republican Party irrelevant. There are ghosts of the old "establishment" past here, clustered around the com-fortable figures of Vice President George Bush and Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr. of Tennessee. There are claimants to the "populist" future, junior congressmen and senators whose names are barely known as yet to the public. But for now, this party is Reagan's to do with as he wishes and to lead where he wants it to go. It can create no political or governmental strategy of which he is not a central part.

In the eyes of the ablest Republican strategists, Reagan has similarly fastened his hold on the Democrats. "They cannot argue that he has been a failure," said one of those strategists. "All they can do is argue that his way is not their way. And the the unique product, and therefore the

Voters Are Looking at Reagan

As Candidate, Platform and Issue

DALLAS—The evident strength
By David S. Broden

By David S. Broden with the Russians, for example - the more people will say that they prefer Reagan's way." This thesis can cer-tainly be debated, and it may be exaggerated, if not totally wrong. But the implications of this view are worth exploring.

If Reagan is the issue in this election, what is there really to debate?

In terms of the institutional presidency, Reagan has unquestionably restored the authority of the office and has made it once again the center of the national government that the Founding Fathers intended. What can be debated is whether his internal management of the presidency rests on a genuine command of pes and facts, or is overly dependent on the guidance he receives from his ofted quarrelsome staff and cahinet "subordinates."

In terms of the economy, Reagan has unquestionably restored a sense of well-being to millions of families. by breaking the pattern of "stagilation" and ushering in a period of hominfiationary growth that has raised real after-tax incomes. What can be debated is whether a continuation of the same policies, which he and the platform promise, will contime to produce pleasing results—or will fall victim to budgetary and chiral trade deficits of unprecedented scale and crash into another recession.

In terms of the society, Reagan has unquestionably engendered a feeling, debated is whether the growing inequality between races and classes that is evident despite his denials is just a temporary "growing pain" problem or a symptom of social injustice which will inevitably bring social conflict in its wake. In terms of the world, Reagan has unquestionably increased visible American military strength and forced the Soviet Union to reconsider its relationship with the other superpower. What can be debated - after the mixed record of Lebanon and Grenada and Central America — is whether he has evolved any coherent strategy for making that power serve the cause of peace and the protection of vital national interests, or whether be is embarked on a course that wil inevitably destabilize the world.

Reagan has been brilliantly successful at projecting his successes and at disguising the risk factors his policies may contain. But if this election is as focused on Reagan as it appear. to be, then conceivably that debate will now finally take place.

Can Good Candidates Make Good Presidents?

By Flora Lewis

Instead, he argues that its obsolescence has produced the paralysis and incapacity that afflict the body politic. Madison's genial ideal of checks and balances worked wonderfully when the United States was young. But Burns holds that in maturity the system can no longer organize power in a good president must be opposite types.

A number of scholars and political thinkers have been worrying for years about this gap. Some attribute it to television and its stress on personal party as the matrix to hold public opinion, legislators and executive together on a steady, creative course is widely recognized as a serious handicap for effective government. Many different proposals have been made for constitutional reform, ranging from Lloyd Cutler's idea of an election every four years for a single ticket "team" of president, vice president and local representative to a complex plan by Burns to strengthen the president. All of them address this central issue of restoring more discipline and responsibility to the parties.

Often, critics look abroad to other democratic stems, most of them one form or another of Britain's parliamentary model. They see advantages, as Burns does, in a tight link between the eadership and the legislature to enact a program ndiluted by compromise.

They tend to overlook the disadvantages of what often becomes a rubber-stamp legislature, driven to pay more attention to theory than practicality in its concern for purity of line.

True, the U.S. Congress does tend to check executive zeal. There has been a curious reversal of its influence in the last half-century. In President Franklin D. Roosevelt's day, Congress repeatedly braked his social and economic reforms until, appealing over the Capitol dome, the president mobilized determined popular will.

In recent years, particularly in the Reagan administration, Congress has forced compromise after compromise on the attempt to dismantle those reforms and on a militant foreign policy. In both periods, there has been congressional restraint of precisely the kind the Constitution's writers envisaged, though in different directions.

Burns's ideas would diminish if not almost demolish this role. They would, in effect, come near to establishing a parliamentary system by making, it much harder for Congress to refuse the president's demands. Burns would balance this imposition of obedience by broadening grounds for im-peachment to include a general loss of confidence in the leadership.

The trouble with all these remedies is that they are likely to cause more damage than they repair.

Americans know how to punish legislators if voters feel they are hamstringing a wise president. They have repeatedly chosen to limit the president's options, even when he is popular.

Checks and balances, considered essential when national power was weak and dispersed, are even more necessary now that communications, money, power and interest organizations including unions are so concentrated. Americans need, as the critics say, a way to pick better leaders and enable them to act with broad public support.

But the answer is not a more powerful president, it is a public more interested in complex issues. The Founding Fathers are not out of date. They foresaw the importance of protecting citizens from their own irresponsibility.

'Gods' of East Germany Proved All Too Mortal

members of the East German Politburo are called, live in their own secluded world in Wandlitz, a small place ootside Berlin, behind barbed wire, heavily guarded by military police, inaccessible to anybody.

They have long ago lost contact with the people. On the rare occasions when Mr. Honecker visits a factory, the specially chosen worker to whom be is going to speak is told beforehand what questions Mr. Honecker will ask and what the worker is matic and lacking an agricultural education, Mr. Grüneberg wanted to introduce large scale, mechanized agriculture. He wanted to separate cultivation from animal husbandry. Such a system is suitable for the American Midwest, but not for East Germany, which has different soil conditions and a tradition of intensive planting. The experts and the farmers warned that this would be a terrible mistake, but Mr. Grüneberg's orders had to be carried out. The only thing that saved East German agriculture from complete ruin was his death in 1981.

Party interference has had a similar catastrophic effect in industry. A sociological study of the Robotron factory in Dresden revealed that three-quarters of young workers felt that they had no voice in the affairs of their factory. More than 60 percent indicated that they were afraid to voice any criticism. (The results of this study were made known only to the party leadership.)

The Communist countries are losing the economic race with the West. People in the Communist countries feel it, and the party leaderships know it. Yet the leaderships seem bewildered about what to do, or how to win the race against capitalism.

Efforts to delay the inevitable take many forms. The Hungarians are hravely experimenting with capitalist forms of management, as well as capitalist-style ownership in certain sectors of their economy.

But where will this lead? Back to capitalism or forward to what? Nobody knows. Hungary's reforms are really an admission that this model of socialism does not work. In a last tatorship of the bosses and introduce Political reunification is a dead end.

desperate effort to save it, the party is falling back on capitalism.

In Poland the more or less spontaneous rise of the Solidarity labor movement was an attempt to overthrow the party machine. But Solidarity lacked a program. Neither Sol-idarity nor the Catholic Church has a clear vision of how to build a democratic Socialist society. The current leadership of the Polish party has admitted the dictatorial nature of the previous party leadership. It has pledged itself to a democratic renewal of Socialist society. But not only is the party's leadership split into various opposing factions, the party membership exists more or less only on paper. Moreover, the leadership lacks a theory about how to democratize Polish society.

Most important, the Polish people, because of the negative experiences with Socialism, are almost wholly alienated from the party, so that the latter is powerless to rule except by force which in horn holds out no bone for democratization

Nor is there any sign whatsoever that the Soviet party leadership has any plan for the democratization that

So will the end of our century be characterized by the end of the Communist movement?

Despite my personal disillusion-ment, I do not believe so. What we are more likely to witness is the painful dying ont of an outmoded model of Socialism and a fierce struggle for new, diversified and more democratic

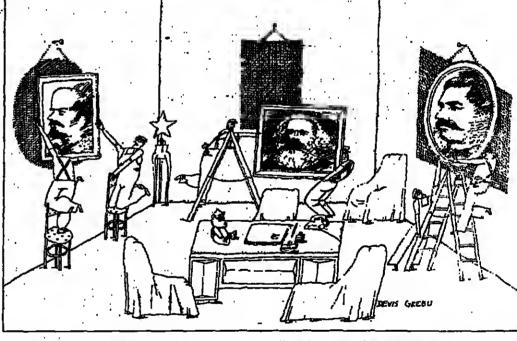

The beginnings of this struggle can already be clearly discerned in such events as the Prague Spring of 1968, and the rise of Solidarity in 1980. Today three distinct and conflicting political philosophies are struggling for power in the Soviet Union

The first is neo-Stalinism, which supports a system that is undemocratic and dogmatic. It stresses egalitarianism and the rights of a "working class," but is held together by police force and repression. Albania, Romania and North Korea are such systems, although the neo-Stalinist ideology continues to have an influence in all Communist countries, particularly among the older generation of party officials.

and other Communist countries.

The second and currently official theory in most Communist countries is the reform philosophy, which seeks to overcome the weaknesses of Stalin's model of Socialism by reforming it - but without relinquishing the dictatorial power of the party machine. This is the tactic Mr. Andropov wanted to use, and which is being plemented in Hungary. The third is the revolutionary phi-democracy. There now exists no detailed program on how to renew Socialist society democratically. The reform regime led by Alexander Dubcek in Czechoslovakia was trying to develop such a program in 1968 when it was stopped by a Sovietled invasion. (Among the radical ideas being considered by the Czech reformers was the possibility of es-tablishing two Communist parties — one in opposition and one in power, but both accepting the fundamental principles of Communist ideology.) A revolutionary Socialist program will have to restore democratic processes to the party. The party leaders would be elected democratically by the membership.

A Western viewer may find the stretch the legs and get a cold beer. But for many of East Germany's 17 million citizens, 70 percent of whom are believed to watch West German television, the nightly sequence of advertisements depicting a world of magical wealth and amusement is watched with a mixture of awe and delight.

Ever since the East German leader. Erich Honecker, announced a few years ago that the Commu-nist authorities would no longer tear down antennas but allow peo-ple to watch what they liked. West Germany's two main television stations have exerted an incalculably large influence on the perceptions of East Germans.

West German television also provides a unique window for East Germans to gain exposure to relatively unhiased news accounts no other East Bloc country can enjoy. Television affects the East German penchant to travel or emigrate in other ways. During last spring's exodus, when more than 25,000 people left for the West, some interlude useful as a chance to guished by the fact that five times as many came from Dresden as from other parts of East Germany. according to Philipp Jenninger, the chancellery's chief adviser on inter-German relations.

Dresden is described as the val-ley of the blind or ignorant, because its depressed geographical location thwarts reception of West German television transmissions.

Doctors, lawyers and engineers have been known to refuse to practice their professions there because much of the region cannot get Western TV programs. Throughout East Germany, the ARD channel is mockingly called "Ausser Raum Dresden" (loosely translated, "everywhere but Dresden").

Nobody is quite sure why so many of this year's refugees came from Dresden, but some speculation has centered on the possibility that lack of exposure to Western television aggravated local frustrations so much that many more people opted to go through the ardu-ous process of applying to leave the Alternatively, there is the belief that not being able to see Western television only exaggerated their expectations about wealth and freedom in the West, thus goading Dresden residents to reach what they might unwittingly perceive as a dreamland.

In June, as I sat in the little waiting-room overlooking Lafayette Street, I could hear tiny trilling and tooting sounds happily wasting in from next door at the Public Theater. They want to do a musical about Al Capone," he explained as the others left, "I don't think they've got the style quite right." Papp has brought sanity and order to the New York theater, giving it the Public complex, Shakespeare in Central Park, and plenty of other things. Now he is begin-ning to arm himself for his biggest battle yet, the creation of the National Theater of Broadway.

It is something he and its other advocates hope to produce out of thin air.

Papp says the fund for his project could start operating with an initial $10 million from private or public sources.

I happen to agree with much of what he said about the drama: The theater's about talking, about debating. It's dialectic, thrilling and pleasurable and perhaps a bit frightening. If people get too com-fortable in one position, I try to put on plays thet will knock them out of it. I'll put them on even if I myself strongly disagree with their point of view. . . I don't like people who are narrow. I don't like the extreme left, the extreme right, or the extreme middle. I reject all that, because in some areas I feel to the right, in some to the left, m some even to the middle. And I plays putting across one point of

There are playhouses, many of them in my own country, where words like that should be branded

Mind you, let's not belittle the British theater. Papp bimself mouned about the relentless domesticity of American drama these days: "I've had to go to England, to Poland, Czechoslovakia and Russia for plays of a social nature, and what a relief they are! You feel you're back in the world at last. Here, it's so internal." There are differences both large and small between our two theaters. In London the curtain some-Such sweet white wines are very times rises on time, in New York much out of style these days. Even the year's major revivals, Arthur Miller's "Death of n Salesman," Tennessee Williams's "The Glass Menagerie" and Clifford Odets's "Awake and Sing," involved conflict between parent and Yet the American drama can be very intense, very strong on the rare occasions it does grapple with social matters. Why, then, did the New York theater seem so silent about the subject closest to itself, namely New York?

It seemed an opportunity squandered. Where in the New York drama was the tension, the barely contained hysteria, the alarming unpredictability of New York itself? Come to that, where was the generosity, the good-humor, the fun, the marvelous energy to be found there, too? Not until May, with "Balm in Gilead," Lanford Wilson's bomage to the lower depths of the Upper West Side, did see a play that caught the feel of the city's streets and tenements and coffee shops. And that work was 20 vears old

Remarkable use of hands and body English to control crowd reaction in delivery. Superb modulation of speed and tone, with the exception of a demagogic use of murdered nuns. Nice rejection of rbetorical devices while using them. Grade: A.

The Reverend Jesse L. Jackson delivered an emotional sermon-on-the-stump. Intensely personal content, riveting delivery after nervous start. Overuse of rhyme to make phrases, but wise use of repetition to drive home "our time speech if length cut by half. Grade: A minus. Excellent on antithesis, sloppy on parallel structure, good use of short sentences - "He won't tell you. I just did." Grade: B plus.

Will Republican speeches this week match that standard? The emotional charge of blacks and a woman candidate will be absent, and the response is rarely as good as the attack.

Although former President Ford and Vice President George Bush are not expected suddenly to bloom as orators, the didactic hawkisbness of Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the chief U.S. representative at the United Nations, might provide some diversion, and it will be interesting to see if Mr. Reagan, the master of the person-to-person technique, can adapt to the new interest in a person-to-people-in-the-hall

Republican oratory tends to be more flagwaving and God-learing than Democratic oratory, and speeches by Democrats reflect an institutional grumpiness about that. This year, however, the Democrats made a point of God, lesus and St. Francis and of physically waving flags at the conclusion of their convention, and Republicans may try to grab the clothes of compassion that the Democrats left by the river-et us examine the tricks of the oratorical trade to see bow they were employed by the Democrats last month, occasionally sprinkling in a few examples from speeches of some of the Republicans scheduled to give the nation a quick transfix next week.

· Anti-rhetoric rhetoric, "Please allow me to skip the stories and the poetry and the temptatioo to deal in nice but vague rhetoric," began Mr. Cuomo, staking his claim to the fed-upwith-schmaltz crowd

Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., the Tennessee Republican, likes to work that same vein, deriding "the same acrid rhetoric, which befouls our domestic pulities."

This exploits the anti-politician resentment, treating the word "rhetoric"—once a definition of rational argument — in its newer sense of artificial eloquence or mere words.

Anti-rhetoric rhetorie is best used by the extremely skillful rhetorician or the hopelessly uninspired speaker.

• Alliteration. This is probably the easies device for orators and their writers, although it was in the doghouse immediately after the Agnew era. (I was the author of "nattering nahobs of negativism," an updating of Adlai E Stevenson's derogation of pessimists as "prophets of gloom and doom." I also submitted "hopeless, bysterical hypochondriacs of history," but when the 4-H Clubs objected, the vice president dropped it. I now profess to scorn the technique

"My constituency is the damned, disinherited, disrespected, despised," cried Mr. Jackson, deploring the "sadness, sacrifice and suffering" caused by Reaganomics. He dreamed of artists "who will convey music and message, rhythm, rhyme and reason

Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts chimed in, praising Mr. Mondale's "chance for change," demanding a "spirit of sacrifice" and deriding the "California Coolidge" whose advisers "practice polarization politics."

Mr. Cuomo preferred "reasonableness and rationality," lest the nation be divided "into the lucky and the left-out, the royalty and the • Humble origins. Big this year. "I watched a small man with thick calluses on both hands work 15 and 16 hours a day," Mr. Cuomo remembered. "I saw him once literally bleed from the bottoms of his feet."

HE Republicans may come back strong on humble origins. Mr. Reagan's father was dismissed from his job during the Depression, and his mother went to work in a dress shop for $14 a week. That was reminiscent of Mr. Nixon's "the wealthiest nation in the world should be the Deity, is traditional in American political rheto-healthiest nation in the world." It looked all ric, Mr. Cuomo concluded with, "for the love of > Metaphor. This gives a knockout figure to speech. "The Republicans believe the wagon train will not make it to the frontier," said Mr. Cuomo, "unless some of our old, some of our young and some of our weak are left behind by the side of the trail." He rode that wagon through his speech, recalling the image gracefully at the end not with a wagon but with words like "pioneer" and "new frontier."

ERHAPS Ms. Ortega will use her personal metaphor: "In the next year or so," she told a recent graduating class, "my Of all current leading orators, Mr. Kennedy is signature will appear on $60 billion of U.S. the one most handicapped in using this theme. eurrency. These lessons in current rhetoric could go on, but as Hubert Humphrey used to say when he Repetition. Called anaphora in rhetoric talked too long. I'm like the little boy who said classes, it can work well if the orator knows just he knew how to spell 'banana' but didn't know on. In Arab societies, especially for women, a family is the center of life. That a woman ould be deprived of its embrace and protecin was profoundly disturbing.

AFEGUARDED by my fictitious husband, I have traveled throughout the Middle East, visiting 14 countries, discovering cultural variety that belies the myth of one finable Arab world. There have been magical ments: sailing up the Nile alongside eternity; rseback riding at dawn beside the petrified ometry of the pyramids; wandering through: Damascus bazzar, assailed by an array of sells, colors, sounds; walking through an Arab eet on a Friday, the Moslem holy day, and stching bundreds of men fall on their knees d bow toward Mecca. There also have been ments of miense sadness, fury, utter frustran and real fear. But almost all of these have on related to my job rather than to my sex.

My experience in the Middle East has been mplex. Some Arab officials have been condeinding, but so have been some American icials in Washington. Hotel rooms can be redibly lonely. But they were just as lonely in : United States. On belance, being a Western man in the Arab Middle East has been an vantage professionally. Because I am a Westser, the official and informal rules that restrict freedom of Arab women have seldom aped to me. As a woman, however, I have been enly aware of these rules.

Last October, I was able to admire much of what Saudi Arabia had accomplished. Yes, there had been waste and corruption, but now there were roads, schools, hospitals, industries, businesses, impressive architecture and green trees where there had been only desert 10 years before. "We have not been lucky," a government minister confided. The Iranian revolution of 1979 had put Saudi Arabia, traditional guardian of the most sacred shrines of Islam, on the religious defensive. Social retrenchment had been further encouraged by the 1979 attack on the Grand Mosque in the holy city of Mecca by a group of Islamic fundamentalists, who contended that the kingdom's rulers had veered from the Prophet Mohammed's path. The reaction has borne down most strongly on women.

Initially, I thought I would not be affected by the intensified restrictions on Saudi women. My Saudi hosts were warm and hospitable: almost friends, like Hisham Nadir, the official responsible for Jubail and Yanhu, the kingdom's new industrial centers, invited me to lunch at their homes, where we had spirited debates about development, movies and Islam, just as during

There were none in my hotel, none in the ministries, few in the streets. The officials I interviewed were men; so were all the employees at the hotels. The only women to be seen in public were shrouded figures covered from head to toe in abeyas, the traditional black cloaks.

NEW YORK - The summer rally on the New York Exchange resumed Tuesday with a buying spree that drove prices to a seven-month high in heavy trading generated by institutional

A wide range of issues were involved in the rally, which analysts said indicated that the investment community is betting that shortterm interest rates will ease in the near future. Several analysts said stocks were trading at low levels to relation to their earnings.

The Dow Jones iodustrial average, which gained 5.08 Monday, climbed 27.75 to 1,239.73, the highest level since it finished at 1,242.88 pp Jan. 24. The gain was the largest since it surged 27.94 on Aug. 9. The average has risen 153.16 points since hitting a 17-month low of 1,086.57 to 1,019.24 on July 24.

Executive Survival Camps Seek to Build Confidence

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

ONDON — Executive survival camps obviously use tough methods to drill participants. One is the "eating-a-rat" approach to building participants' self-confidence through overcoming fear. "Most men and some women seed some form of apparent danger, it gives you a high and does ou good," said Rodney Gordon, a London-based architect who as played several survival games in Britain. The game is a recent

There are outdoor activities in which fear is generated by saving to perform a difficult physical task, such as at the Executive Adventure School in Scotland.

Executives who show up at the week-long Leadership Trust ourse in Symonds Yat in Wales are asked to choose the author activity that they fear nost. Scuba-diving is a favorte for those executives who an't swim and rock climbing ip a narrow spiky rock forma-ion overlooking the Wye is a natural for executives who affer from fear of heights. Operation Raleigh, a lead-arship program aimed at rounger employees to be started by several British companies in November, has planned a 36-hour initiation course of outdoor obysical challenges. David King, chairman of British National Life Insurance Co., one of the companies sponsoring the project, alled the initiation program "36 hours of unmitigated hell." If a andidate makes it through that, he or she gets to engage in such asks as canal digging.

Most leadership-training programs claim to achieve team milding. And recently, many are emphasizing participatory

"The way Leadership Trust is set up is to force the leader of a project to draw the best out of his team rather than to try to do he whole thing himself," said Derek Martin, head of training at Eastman Kodak Co, in London.

Companies that encourage their managers to go to Leadership Trust include Shell International Petroleum Co. and Security Express, a London-based security firm. Even some business schools are including such projects in their advanced-manage-

"Instead of reading about it, they got to get out there and do t," said Tex Smiley, a faculty member at the International Management Institute in Geneva, who devised a practical case

EXECUTIVES participating in the eight-week advanced-management course at the institute are given ropes and planks to build a prototype structure that moves radioactive asis. The prize for the winning team is a big contract at the end. The teams have to build the structure across the Rhone River, have it inspected, tear it down, bring it back and build it back up in a certain time limit.

"At one point a helicopter service allows management to join the operational team," said Mr. Smiley. "Management usually charges down on the operational team, which can disrupt things completely and lead to total confusion."

In Leadership Trust's profit-and-loss project, participants are split into a company's various functions — senior management, production-quality control, distribution, etc. The goal is to get as much colored dye as possible into three "profit tanks" in the middle of the obstacle course. But each group, to test its ingenuity, is only given partial directions for getting to the tanks.

As in a real corporation, communications between divisions are restricted, and they can't see each other. There, too, the result is often chaos. "They get all mixed-up. Invariably, there is a low-level guy that has a vital bit of information but nobody will listen to him," said John Eaton, the executive-course director at Leadership Trust.

The theory behind participating in real-life case studies is to teach managers how to build, and work with, an effective team that will achieve what they want. In each project there is a right way and a wrong way of doing things according to one's particular set of human resources. "Some people say it's a bunch of nonsense," said Mr. Smiley. "It certainly isn't the end all and be all of management education."

Citroën Predicts Accord

Unions to Discuss Layoff Proposal

PARIS - Citroen expects union agreement Wednesday on a controversial program of layoffs and re-training despite possible resistance from the powerful, Communist-led General Confederation of Labor, or CGT, the company said Tues-

Citroen's announcement of the layoff plans in May touched off a series of sometimes violent strikes and factory occupations in the Par-is region. Last week the company offered laid-off workers 10 months of retraining at 70 percent of their current wages. It wants to lay off about 2,000 workers as part of a plan to cut 6,000 jobs from its work orce of 43,000.

The proposals come as the French antomobile industry, with heavy losses and a shrinking European market share, faces large-scale job reductions in a bid to improve competitiveness. Similar measures to streamline the French coal, steel and shipbuilding industries have also empted widespread worker protests over the past year, some of them leading to violence.

Workers' representatives were to meet Citroën management in a formal session Wednesday to discuss the company's offer of retraining. The CGT, which maintains that no layoffs are necessary, said Tues-day that it would not discuss the proposal in detail until the annual August vacation is over. One CGT spokesman said the union would oot accept the plan unless workers were guaranteed jobs after retrain-

Nigeria Reluctant to Learn Austerity

Military Rulers Try to Deal With Economic Woes

By Clifford D. May New York Times Service

ABUJA, Nigeria — The high-way to this unfinished city, designated as Nigeria's capital of the future, ends abruptly. Street lights have yet to be installed in the red earth alongside the road. Past the highway, balf-built apartment blocks, office build-ings and hotels rise among hills that are still grazed by chalk-white cattle driven by Fulani

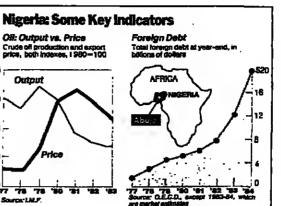

The federal military government that came to power in a coup last New Year's Eve has not abandoned Abuja, hnt neither does it have the means to proceed as planned. That represents the nation's economie problems. It is unable to march briskly forward toward development on the one band, but it is reluctant to retreat to an era of slow growth and diminished expectations on the other.

The economic problems are formidable. The external debt is oow estimated at more than $20 billion. By 1986-87, its debt service ratio — the proportion of export earnings devoted to servicing the debt — could be as high as 50 percent.

The government recently succeeded in reaching an agreement to reschedule $3.5 billion in unsecured sbort-term trade debts on favorable terms, including a grace period of two and a half years, and an interest rate only 1 percentage point over the the London interbank offered rate.

But secured creditors have so far refused a similar arrangement, insisting that Nigeria first prove that it truly means to put its house in order by negotiating a loan from the International Monetary Fund.

That does not appear to be imminent. Talks with the IMF came to a halt in July following Nigeria's repeated refusals to ac-cept three conditions: sharp devaluation of the naira (Nigeria's vastly overvalued currency). trade liberalization and a curb on domestic oil subsidies.

So far, Nigerin has not reneged on any of its financial obligations. It has been coming up with the money by spending only about $400 million a month on imports, which is why there are shortages of raw materials, spare parts and commodities. It had also been making ends meet, ac-cording to oil industry sources, by pumping a little more oil than the 1.3 millioo barrel-a-day quota alloted it as a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

According to these sources. Nigeria was averaging 1,5 mil-lion barrels a day in the first quarter of the year. In the second quarter, the average reportedly went down to 1.26 million barrels a day. But at the OPEC summit in Vienna in July, Nigeria received permission to boost production to 1.4 million barrels a day in August and to 1.45 mil-lion in September.

Since then, Nigeria's oil minister, Tam David-West, has indicated that Nigeria will continue to produce at the higher levels after September as well,

But many of those who follow the oil market, noting that de-mand has been softening, predict that Nigeria will not easily find buyers for that extra oil, at least oot at the OPEC price.

Meanwhile, few would disagree that life has become harder for most of Nigeria's estimated 100 million citizens since the military takeover. Consumer prices are oow 90 percent above what they were in January, when the soldiers entered the marketplaces, forcing merchants to open their warehouses and sell their stocks for little or oo profit.

Prices are also 10 percent higher than they were in December, the final month of civilian rule. A chickeo now costs about 10 naira, roughly $13 at the official rate of exchange. A single egg costs about 50 cents. The per-capita gross national product of Nigeria, Africa's biggest oil producer, still averages less than $800 a year, (That compares with (Continued on Page 11, Col. 5)

first-half trend has continued in

Hoechst said domestic sales slipped slightly in the second quarter from the first three months, but this was more than compensated for by a rise in second-quarter foreign business. Above-average gains in the volume of sales were registered in North and Latin America. Particularly strong was business

TOKYO — Japan's pharmaceu-tical industry, which grew rapidly in the 1970s, now faces a difficult period, mainly because of measures in cut government spending on health care, Mitsui Bank Ltd. said Tuesday in an economic report.

Overall medical spending in Japan rose only 6.4 percent in the year that ended in March 1982, to 12.87 trillion yen ($53.62 billion), compared with average anoual ar that ended in March 1982, to rises of 16.8 percent in the preceding decade, the report said. Output of medicines rose an average of 13 percent a year in value terms in the decade through the end of March 1981, but at only 5 percent a year in the following three years, the report the bank's report said.

In calendar 1983, the sales value of medicines produced by the Japa-ed by development of new prod-nese pharmaceuocal industry was 4 ucts, the report said. Marketing of Many Western analysts here fear that these hardships presage a pro-longed period of deterioration. But there is at least a minority of economists, bankers and diplomats who think that Nigeria needs in experience some shrinking pains, to weed out the weak and inefficient industries and businesses, force large segments of the underemployed urban population back to the land, and encourage the substitution of local foods, such as yams and cassava, for expensive imports like bread and rice.

"In the West African village I lived in as a Peace Corps volunteer," ooe Western hanker said, "people ate chicken only on special occasions. A poultry industry built on imported feeds is a luxury item that maybe a poor country, which Nigeria doesn't like in admit it is can't afford."

Nigeria's difficolties can be traced to the period between 1973 and 1981, when the price of oil rose from $2 a barrel to $34, bringing in $23.4 billion in the peak year of 1980.

Largely because the country lacked the bureaucratic sophisticatioo to manage or even keep track of all that money, much of it was allocated in consumer imports, prestige or wasteful projects, poliocal, regional and ethnic patronage and the personal enrichment of those sitting in the right offices.

The overnight millionaires not only consumed conspicuously in Nigeria, they also invested discreetly abroad, adding to a steady outward flow of capital.

The military government has yet to articulate precise economic plans and priorities. But a day of reckoning may be drawing oear. Economists say a recent, unpubview Committee, is likely to present the government with some hard choices, such as what to do about CANBERRA, Australia — The government expects Australia's real gross domestic product to grow about 4 percent in fiscal year 1985, which began July 1, Treasurer Paul Keating said Tuesday in his budget speech. Gross domestic product is a country's total output of goods and services, minus income from opera tions abroad. Mr. Keating's forecast compared with preliminary estimate by the Statistics Bureau of 5.7-percent year-to-year growth in fiscal 1984 and with a 1.2-percent decline in fiscal 1983. Mr. Keating said he expected an increase this year in gross nonfarm growth to about 5 percent from 4.1 percent in fiscal 1984.

Exports Sustaining Japan's Expansion

TOKYO — Sustained export growth and the recovery of private-sector capital spending are sustaining Japan's economic expansion, the Economic Planning Agency said Tuesday in a monthly report.

The report said personal consumption is rising slowly but is contributing to the growth of the economy.

cootributing to the growth of the economy.

Japan's current-account surplus has increased but the long-term capital deficit remains large because of the sizeable outflow of capital attracted by higher overseas interest rates, it said. The agency said net long-term capital outflow reached a record $6.2 billion in June, bringing the Jamary-June June, bringing the January-June deficit to about $20.2 billion, more than three times the deficit in the like period to 1983.

THE MIRACLE

By Irving Wallace. 436 pp. $17.95. Dutton, 2 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Andrew M. Grecley

OPE John Paul III announces to the world That a secret diary of St. Bernadette of Lourdes has been discovered. It reveals one of the secrets the Mother of Jesus told her when she was a child; the Lady will return to Lourdes this year to appear again and work another miracle over seven days in August.

Immediately pilgrims begin to flock to the shrine from around the world, including the Russian foreign minister who is a secret victim of muscular dystrophy, a Chicago lawyer who has bone cancer, an English woman who has been cured of sarcoma at Lourdes and is therefore a "miracle woman," a blind Italian actress, a Basque terrorist who plans to blow up the shrine. With the pilgrims come an assorted collection of skeptics, a Jewish doctor, a cyni-cal woman journalist, and an equally cynical clinical psychologist.

Wallace's premise and characters are the matrix and the strands of a captivating and attractive story which both the religious and the non-religious will find hard not to enjoy. He weaves the strands together, against the ambiguous background of Lourdes — on the one hand, superstition, exploitation, tasteless devotion, a dubious saint and a dubious history; and on the other hand, faith, mystery, and something, or perhaps Something, that defies explanation.

Deftly Wallace blends into his tapestry the history, the controversy, the medical investiga-tions, the hunger for miracles and the skepticism about them. Those two prototypical pil-grims, Alexis Carrel and Emile Zola are both given their brief day in court, men who came to scoff, one of whom went away a believer and the other a confirmed unbeliever. You wonder which side Irving Wallace will choose.

I won't spoil Wallace's solution. It suffices to say that it is witty, ingenious, brilliant, a marvelous storytelling twist which makes me frankly envious. Moreover, with its irony within ironies, it is persuasive and even true on a number of different levels.

At various points in the narrative, especially as Wallace approaches his denouement, both the devout old-fashioned Catholic reader and the devout old-fashioned agnostic reader will be dangerously close to loss of temper. Neither will be completely satisfied by the ending (the agnostic marginally less so), but those who are on the continuum in between will find it somehow deeply satisfying — and if we are storytellers, we will also be tempted to anger at Wallace's consummate skill in wiggling out of the dilemma which faces any author who tries to cope with Lourdes.
"Miracle" is not a profound religious story.

like "The Song of Bernadette" from so long ago. It is, however, a marvelously told tale which, oddly enough, may, for all its slick, quick-flowing style, tell us more about the meaning of Lourdes than did Franz Werfel's classic. Like many other piterins before him. Wallace is both attracted by the faith and mystery and repelled by the superstition and exploitation. Like many previous pilgrims, he comes away with the conviction that there is Something else which must be said even though he is not quite sure what it is. You're going to have to read the book to learn how he describes that Something.

Andrew M. Greeley, a Copholic priest, is the author of the novel "Lord of the Dance," and with Mary Greeley Durkin of the forthcoming "How to Save the Catholic Church." He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

A tragedy, soccer players are apt to say, but to pot all that has gone before in perspective, there have been real tragedies this summer. Mike Barrett, 24, was taken ill after being recalled for pre-season training with Bristol Rovers. Barrett was never in the big league; a pacy winger who had given his hometown club more than a hundred honest performances, be was in full employment and had at least one other club pre-pared to offer money for his skills. # Harris, Near Mark, Waived by Steelers

PITTSBURGH - Franco Harris, 362 yards short of hreaking the National Football League's career rushing record, was placed on waivers late Monday by the Pitts-burgh Steelers following a monthlong contract dispute.
"It's over," said the team's president, Dan Rooney.

On Sunday night Harris had said he was negotiating with the cluh and was ready to report to training camp. "I don't think they really wanted me," he said Monday.

"When Dan didn't get back to me this morning like he said he would I had a gut feeling something would happen."
The unexpected move means that the 34-year-old Harris - who rushed for 1,007 yards last season - can be claimed by any of the NFL's 27 other teams. But there are loopboles. As n vested 13-year veteran, Harris can refuse to report to a claiming team and thereby become a free agent. And the Steelers can withdraw waivers if Harris is claimed; had they waited notil next week's final cuts to waive him the move could not be recalled.

"We did everything we could to sign Franco." Rooney said. "We nitiated the negotiations in March and negotiated in good faith

Harris, in the $385,000 option year of his contract, refused to report to training camp on July 20 and did not play in any of the Steelers three pre-season games.

Harris is not a flashy, game-Second on Tuesday was Russian breaking runner (his longest gain n year ago was 19 yards), but be has been one of the most consistent and durable running backs in NFL his-tory. Among the highlights of his 12-season Pittsburgh career:

His total of 11,950 yards ranks second only to Jim Brown's 12,312. Holds or shares 24 NFL regular-season and playoff records, ineluding most rushing attempts (2.881), post-season yardage 1,556), most 1,000-yard seasons (eight) and most consecutive 1,000yard seasons (six, 1974-79).

provision. The Steelers then decid-ed that with fullbacks Frank Pol-lard and Elton Veals running well; Harris was not vital to their 1984. plans (the team has undergone a youth movement, cutting six veterans and trading two others since training camp began).

"In negotiations it seemed the Steelers did not have any need for me the second year [1985]," Harris; said. "I was thinking that if they wanted two years I would go with a iwo-year contract, and if they wanted one year I would go with one year. One year was fine with me, but later on I found out that an option was part of it."

"Fontball is a team game," said Rooney. "Franco has been a great player and always put the team before himself. By not reporting to camp he placed us in a position where we had no alternatives left. It would not be fair to the team, players and coaches to let this situation continue. I am not happy with it but I have to think of the coming seasoo and this team."

"I just have to wait and see what happens," Harris said, "I'm sorry it had to end this way. Now it's like being a senior in college, waiting by the phone to see if someone will call you. I still think I can play."

Meanwhile, the Denver Broncos acquired eight-year wide receiver Butch Johnson from Houston for n third-round 1985 draft choice. Dallas had traded Johnson, 30, to the Oilers in the off-season.

"I was shocked," said Johnson. "I'm not mad, but I'm perplexed. Denver will be my third team in six months." There is no guarantee Johnson will start with the Broncos, who expect to go with Steve Watson and Clint Sampson and have veteran Dave Logan in re-

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - On behalf of so many of us who can no longer get from first to third on a single can't throw home from the outfield without three bounces and a strong tailwind, can't run two straight fly patterns without making sore there's a paramedic nearby, can't take it to the hoop because all that's left of our shake and bake is crumble and stumble; on behalf of so many of us whose spirit is willing but whose flesh is weak, let me say to Lee Trevino:

Congratulations on winning the PGA golf championship at the age of 44. You may oot have turned back the hands of time, but you sure did stall them.

It's rare when I can read the sports pages and see that someone older than I am is cashing checks from anywhere other than Social Security. Day after day, I read how some mananger or coach is saying that this tackle or that shortstop is too old to play. Youth movements, everyone in sports is always talking about youth movements.

They're swell if you're youth. But if you're what they euphemistically call "an aging veteran" — all of 32 in most sports, 35 at the outside then when a manager starts talking about a youth movement you'd better make sure your dry cleaner has one-day service.

I'm still on the sunny side of 40, thank you, but many of the people I work with are young Turks in their mid-20s. If you ask them about the history of the Democratic Party they can go all the way back to amy Carter, All they know about Woodstock is what their baby sitters told them. So I could hardly expect them to appreciate the cultural significance of Trevino's victory. What do they know from 44, except that John Riggins wears it? The Washington Redskins' Riggins, incidentally, is 35, a virtual mastodon among running backs.) Jerry West? Hank Aaron? Sure. Read about them in high school.

Year after year, the New York there was always this one hopeful Kranepool was still only 25.

When he was still only 28 years old, Kranepool was no longer referred to as a kid, but as an aging 45-year-old Phil Niekro. Here's to veteran. It made me tmeasy to think my youth might be similarly slipping away. I don't remember getting older. When did he?

It must have come upon me gradually, mostly when I wasn't inoking. Io 1979, Kranepool retired in the wake of another youth movement, and I felt strangely betrayed. How could the Mets force him to retire? He was still only 34. It was then that I started reading the box scores differently. I cared less for how the teams did than for how certain individual players — older players — on the teams did. My only rule was: If you're older than I am, I root for you. If you're younger, you're on your own. As you might have guessed, I'm now down to a precious few. I haven't enough grains of sand left in my hourglass to make an anthill let alone a castle. In tennis, there's no one to root for (I have ties older han Aaron Krickstein). Boxer Larry Holmes, 34, is close to my age, but the only reason he's still active is that he's so good at not fighting; by the time he's actually ready to get in the ring with Gerrie Coetzee, he may need a cane to help him onto the apron. In track. there's Carlos Lopes, the 37-yearold Olympic marathon man from Portugal, and don't think he wasn't a sentimental favorite among us aging media types in Los Angeles. I've got a handful of pros left to root for in basketball, notably Dan Issel, Bob Lanier, Fred Brown and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar; at the risk of being ostracized from the sportswriting fraternity, I got misty when

Elvin Hayes retired. Fortunately, expansion, free agency and multiyear, zillion-dol-York Mets were formed and their lar contracts have conspired to

Behind Closed Snores

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — From the diary of Merriman Cowell, secretary of the Department of Gross and Tremendous thrill today. My first cabinet meeting since being sworn in. Wore my three-piece shadow plaid suit because the president had complimented me on it at the swearing in. "Merriman." he'd said, "that suit makes you look just like Cary Grant in 'Bringing Up Baby.' " I said, "Gosh, Mr. President, I don't think a fellow with Cary Grant's tailoring know-how would be caught dead in a shadow plaid."

"And what's more, I've got one just like it," said the president, wbo obviously hadn't heard me clearly, for which I was grateful until he said, "Which tailor do you work for, Merriman?"

It shows bow the problems of the presidency can weigh on a noble mind. Luckily, somebody told him I was not a tailor, but was there to be sworn in as secretary of gross and net, which he did beautifully.

It was probably a mistake to wear the shadow plaid today, because when everybody was closeted in the cabinet room, the president smiled at me and said I'd have to wait with my fahric samples in the Oval Office since this was a cabinet meeting and tailors couldn't sit in without a security clearance.

I was too emharrassed to tell him I was a cabinet member. I headed for the door. In the silence I could hear [Secretary of Defense] Cap Weinberger whispering to the president:

"Didn't I see you recently swearing that fellow in as secretary of

"By George and by golly!" the president cried in a whisper. "Did you catch his name?" "Merriman Cowell" whispered

Cappy.

The president smiled, then spoke "For the to the whole darn cabinet. "For the benefit of those who haven't met our newest cabinet secretary," he said, "I want to introduce Chairman Mao." When everybody had shaken hands and said "Pleased to meet you, Mr. Chairman," I had a note from [Press Secretary] Larry Speakes. It said: "That Chairman Mao gaffe is off the record."

As though I had to be told! I know the president's great sense of humor is deliberately distorted by Democrats, liberals and even worse in their efforts to make people think he wants to bomb Russia and can't tell a member of his own cabinet from a dead Chinaman.

So the president sometimes dozes off during cabinet meetings, just like Mike Deaver [of the White House staff] says. So what. I was surprised he didn't sleep more than he did today. All that talk about balance of payments and the Polish Dozing off on these subjects shows class. Remember what [former President] Nixon said when the collapse of the Italian lira? "I don't give a [odious word] about the Italian lira," he said. That crudity is not President Reagan. Start talking Polish zloty to him and. very delicately, he dozes right off. The man is a class act.

It was heart-warming to see him wake immediately when [Treasury Secretary] Don Regan started talk-ing about our terrific economy and how the Democrats are eating their liver hecause our policies haven't destroyed the country.

The president said that what really cheesed him off was the Democrats accusing him of unfairness. He remembered a movie he'd made with Pat O'Brien in which both he and Pat started life as orphan kids without a cent in the world, and both of them made it to the top by the end of the show, and without stooping to take one dirty nickel from anybody along the way. That's how deeply he believed in fairness.

Then, turning to me, he said, "How is the net holding up?" Here was my big moment: "No matter what we do," I said, "the gross always turns out to be bigger

"Can they land just as safely in the gross as they can in the net?" asked the president.

Of course, of course! He was talking about the safety net. Now I'd given him the impression we also had a safety gross. I sensed f was in trouble, but fortunately he dozed off. Maybe he'll forget it before the cabinet meets again.

Lonesome Jim: Books on the Mississippi

By Andrew H. Malcolm

New York Times Service

GRANITE CITY, Illinois —
The young deckhands stood under the light by the bow, ready to tie up their string of beavily laden barges in the lock for the six-foot drop to the next level of the Mississippi River.

From the dark, high up on the lock wall, came a man's voice. Would you boys like somethin' to read - books or magazines?" "Uh, yessir," said Glenn Barnes, "that'd be real nice."

Down came a yellow plastic bucket on a length of clothesline. The hucket was crammed with old magazines and books. Later, as they thumbed through the pages, the riverboat men could read a little message stamped in black ink on the cover: "Compliments of Lonesome Jim, Locks 27, Granite City, Ill. 62040."

Almost every night in recent months, this Johnny Appleseed of books has appeared here near St. Louis at Locks 27, the busiest on the United States's busy inland water system. Hour after hour he stands at the water by a large pile of books and magazines. Lonesome Jim greets each boat with the same question, wav-ing at the pilothouse and then disappearing in an old car about

He is becoming a minor legend on the river, where thousands of people work, moving much of the nation's commerce.

Living and working on the Mississippi is not an intellectual experience. It is a round-theclock struggle involving strong arms, grinding winches, thundering diesel engines and 30 days without a day off. There are only television, where the signals fade every few hours, and an informal network exchanging X-rated video cassettes. Although Samuel L. Clemens's experience as a Mississippi River pilot inspired his pseudonym, Mark Train, and his greatest novel, "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," books have not been an integral part of life on the river. But Lonesome Jim is trying to change that "I do it," he says. because I know how awful it is to have nothing to read,"

"Lonesome Jim" lowers bucket of words to boatmen. When he leaves the lock at night. he returns to his three-room, second-floor apartment here to pursue his own reading.

"My goal is to read 150 books a year, all kinds," he says. "But I'm a little behind in Shakespeare." By day Hearon runs the library at the old Army Supply Depot, for which he earns $15,000 a year. It is his mission, be believes, to introduce as many people as pos-

Hearon's father was killed in an automobile accident when the boy was 6. So be grew up on his grandparents' farm in Kentucky, reading his Uncle Charlie's dime westerns and his grandmother's romance magazines. "I read evcrything f could get my hands on," he said, "even Oxydoi box-wanted to be a writer, a really keen writer," he said. "I'm not a writer, but I deal with words and what other people write."

Hearon was in the Air Force and taught English in Afghanistan, Washington and rural Kentucky after studying library science at Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virgin-

Four years ago, when he took over the depot's little library, overgrown bushes obscured the front door. All the books were crammed into two small rooms behind the noisy recreation Today the bushes are gone.

There are tables and chairs for those who want to stay and read. On Wednesday mornings at 11 o'clock, Hearon has all the neighborhood's day-care children in for a story hour. "I make up every story as I go along, just like I used to on the farm," he said. But Hearon's greatest pleasure comes from his river work. The lock crews all know him and his 11-year-old Toyota, riding low in the rear because of all the books and magazines he collects.

Word about Lonesome Jim is getting around on the river, too. A barge worker recently asked the lock crew to tell "the book guy" that he would be back upriver in 10 days and wanted something to read. The other day, just as a bucket-ful of reading matter was de-scending to a barge, the captain aimed his spotlight at Hearon, switched on his loudspeaker, blasted his ship's horn and said. "How y'all doin', Lonesome

"What a thrill that was," Hearon said later. "They know

But the best was yet to come. "I lowered some books to some guys," Hearon recalled, "and when they got them, they didn't say anything not thank you, not anything. They just started reading. I mean seriously reading, right there on the bow. And I thought to myself, now isn't that just about the greatest reward I could ever ask for?"

son station Tuesday that he would sink his boat, the Calypso, in the ocean when the ship ends a fouryear expedition through the South Pacific next March. He said he would take that action rather than "prostitute" the vessel as an exhibition piece. "We have refused an offer from the United States to buy her for $5.2 million," Consteau said during taping of a program to be aired in September. He bought and renovated the 141-foot (43-meter) World War II minesweeper in the late 1940s and has since sailed it more than a million miles in almost all the seas of the world." Consteau will build a new exploration vessel, Calypso II, propelled by an energy-conserving windpowered turbine.

A former captain who fought in the 1936-39 Spanish Civil War and believed by his family to have died in the war, was welcomed home Tuesday in Burjasot, an eastern Spanish city. José Navarro Ruiz, 74, who fought with the losing Republican troops against General Francisco Franco's forces, was recently found in a mental institution in Algeria with amnesia. He was greeted by his wife, Josefina, 84, his daughter, also named Josefina, and stepson, Lais Sanchez Ruiz, who still thinks he is living in 1953, was discovered by Dr. José Manuel Moran during a recent visit to the mental institution.

John Denver says the three most important global issues are nuclear weapons, the population explosion and the environment. "I hope the world of peace we pray for will be a ... world without nuclear weapons. & world free from bunger and a world where people have great consider-. ation for the environment," the singer said in Tokyo Monday. Denver is in Japan to give a free concert Wednesday at Lake Biwa, 220 miles (350 kilometers) southwest of Tokyo, to publicize an international conference on the environment to be held next week in Otsu.

When tanks of the Free French forces numbled into Paris the evening of Aug. 24, to be followed later by American troops, the capital was recling after six days of street lighting between the underground resistance movement and fleeing German soldiers. Sartre, then 39. agreed to recount the atmosphere of the uprising for the underground newspaper Combat —edited by his friend, the writer Albert Camus. The series appeared in print from Aug. 28 to Sept. 4, 1944. "Even in the quietest areas, the sharp sound. of a pebble hitting a stone rings out every two or three minutes — it is the sound of a bullet. Elsewhere, suddenly, coming from who knows where, a submachine gun spatters fire." Sartre said in first of the series. Describing a group of civilians caught in cross fire between resistance fighters and German tanks, Sartre wrote: "They waited patiently, showing no anger, but with just a touch of anguish, the same way they wait for bread each day outside the bakeries, or wait for the Americans to arrive."
